I. "Doctors Without Borders" _____ / 5 points

Read the following text carefully. Then, answer the questions that follow.

Bringing Help Where It Is Needed

Doctors Without Borders can intervene to help refugees. Sometimes refugees do not even have clean water. The volunteers come with water and medicine. They show refugees how to make water safe for drinking.

Tsunami

In 2004 there was a tsunami, or tidal wave, in South Asia. The tsunami destroyed many towns. Many people were hurt or killed. Doctors Without Borders worked for more than a year in countries that were hit by the tsunami. They gave people shots to make sure they did not get sick. The doctors gave people supplies like tents and clothing. They talked to people about what had happened. Sometimes just being there to listen to the victims helped the most.

_____ / 5 points

- Read the following unseen passage. Then, answer the questions that follow.

Helping Hands

When disasters like floods, earthquakes, or fires happen, many people lose their homes and belongings. They may not have sufficient food, clean water, or clothing. During these hard times, volunteers come together to help. They collect supplies such as bottled water, canned food, blankets, and medicine. These supplies are sent to the people who need them most.

The Helping Hands group is made up of kind and caring people who want to make a difference. They work together to help families get back on their feet after a disaster. Sometimes, they help build shelters or rebuild damaged homes. Other times, they organize food drives or clothing collections at schools and community centers.

Members of Helping Hands also comfort those who are scared or sad. A warm smile or a few kind words can mean a lot to someone who has lost everything. Helping Hands shows that small actions can make a big difference.
